

Do you trust your memory? Do you trust that everything you see is real? Do you trust that your memories are real? If your answer is yes, I would like to congratulate you that you are completely wrong

The human mind is a very complex thing, as it is responsible for generating memories, forming a personality, generating emotional feelings, so when we focus more on it, you will find that your mind memorizes everything it sees, even if it passes quickly in front of you. What I want to say is that these slides have been in front of you for a while, but what do you think caught your attention? Most of us were attracted to the picture of Jerry and smiled when he saw it. Why because I reminded him of his childhood or the childhood of his children, but I want to ask what did you see in this picture? I would like to tell you that you did not see the whole picture and that your memory deceived you again. Let's enlarge the picture a little bit. You will find that what is in Jerry's mouth is another picture and not a piece of cheese or anything else that your memory has built to make the whole picture in your mind.

I want to ask are you afraid of mice? In any house you will find that at least one person screams when he sees a mouse, but if these people are among us, why didn't he scream when he saw Jerry? You'll answer me because it's a cartoon or just a picture, well let me put the question in another way What if we showed this picture isn't that Jerry too why don't I see you smiling why do you feel disgusted now, I'll tell you now most of our childhood was watching Tom and Jerry cartoons so the scenes of that mouse were etched into our memory and whenever we saw it You reminded us of something nice but imagine with me there is someone who loves your fears and rejoices when he sees a real mouse. Were you surprised? Don't be surprised, it's the truth. It's all from the formation of your memory. If you had been raising a mouse since your childhood, you would not have those fears of it,

The aim of this topic is to address the impact of these influences on the formation of our memory and the effect of social media on changing our personality.

But before that, let's delve deeper into the formation of the brain.
